01. Read the text.

What makes a relationship work? For some couples, trust is the key, while for others, compatibility is more important. However, according to psychologists, a number of factors are important. These are the key elements in any long-lasting relationship:

- Trust: The ability to believe in someone, have confidence in them, and believe them is fundamental to any relationship. This element often becomes stronger over time, as you learn to share your emotions and feelings with each other.

- Understanding: if you want your relationship to last, it's important not to try to change your partner. Try to accept them for who they are. Do your best to understand them, even if there are times when this is difficult. Ben and Sheila have been together for three years and admit that they are very different: "but we accept that"; they say. "We listen to each other and respect each other's opinions."
- Friendship: This is often how relationships start, and it is vital for a relationship to develop. Frequently people make friends with each other, then find that love and romance follow. Maxine and Joe were friends for years before they started going out. "Our friendship is at the heart of our relationship," they say. "That's why we're still together. We know we'll be friends for life."
- Romance: It's important to keep romance alive. Romance is all about the little things that make a difference - the unexpected gifts and surprises.
- Communication: Being open and honest is important. Let your partner know how you feel, and keep talking. Thalia and her husband Jon used to have communication problems. "We were always arguing, but I realized it was because we were both stressed," says Thalia. "We made an effort to talk about our problems together, and now we make sure there's time every day to catch up with each other, however busy things are." But remember, none of these things is enough on its own. To make it last, every relationship needs a combination of them all.

02. COMPLETE the text about London with the most suitable form of the adjective in brackets. Use the comparative and the superlative structures:

“In the summer of 2012, they welcomed millions of people to London and the UK for an unforgettable experience.” The Olympic Games in London.

London

London is one of _____ (large) cities in the world. Its population is _____ (low) than Tokyo or Shanghai, but it is one of _____ (popular) tourist destinations of all. London is probably very famous for its museums, galleries, places and other sights, but it also includes a wider range of cultures and religions than many other places. People used to say that it was _____ (dirty) city too, but it is now much cleaner than it was. To the surprise of many people, it now has some of _____ (good) restaurants in Europe too. For some people, this makes London the most exciting city in Europe.
